Dear Reader of this letter,

I have a good book for you! If you like Roald Dahl then this is a treat for you. Right now I am not going to talk about Matilda, B.F.G. or Charlie and the Chocolate Factory (although you should read these too). I am here to recommend Dahl's autobiography about his childhood, BOY.

You should read this book because Dahl had an interesting childhood. Going through a handful of different schools and learning a lot on the way. Roald Dahl has a very interesting way of writing and makes you feel you were there living it too.

My favourite part of the book was when Dahl thought he had committed murder, but it turned out to be a false alarm. You'll have to read the book to find out why.

At Roald Dahl's big school, Repton, they were involved with Cadbury. He and his other school mates got to test some of the new flavours and report what they thought on them. Doesn't that sound like a fun job? It certainly does to me, but you'll have to read the book to get more detail.

Dahl's headmaster also went on to become the Archbishop of Canterbury and was involved in a very special ceremony. If you don't believe me, read the book and then you'll find out the truth and find out how he got there.

Let me finish by telling you that you should definitely pick up a copy and read today!

Yours sincerely,
A. Read
